CLASS COMMITTEE.

JAMES RUSSELL CARRET,
Class Secretary.

GEORGE COMBE MANN.
ELIOT CHANNING CLARKE.

Classmates:

Our fifty-first anniversary finds our number still further diminished during the five years since the publication of the Thirteenth Report in June, 1913. We have lost ten graduates and one non-graduate,—in the order of their passing away, Boutelle, F. J. Clark, Chenery, Thomas, E. L. Wood, Davis, Cushing, English, F. P. Stearns, Leverett and Saunders,—and I have learned of the earlier death of two non-graduates, Bigelow and Holstein.

In the list of members of the class I have retained the separation of previous reports "Members of the Class" and "Members who were not graduated," but in the biographies I have put all together in alphabetical order, enclosing the names of non-graduates in brackets.

At the suggestion of Miss Nina E. Browne, who has given me most efficient help in the preparation of this report, the family data as to each appear in a table after his name. There are occasional gaps that need to be filled, chiefly dates of decease. Please notice when names are starred and no date of decease is given. I trust that each of us who possesses the needed information either as to his own family or that of another, or who can suggest where the information can be obtained, will inform me.

I wish to express my indebtedness to our classmate Mann for his assistance in the preparation of this report. Last year in addition to other work he arranged all the family data and this year without his help and stimulation I probably should not have completed the report in season for distribution at Commencement. Assistance by others in the preparation of special articles will be acknowledged in each case. I am indebted to our classmate Davenport, who has preserved them, for the rank lists of our course in college. It has seemed to me worth while to reprint them so that they may appear in one place as a part of the history of the Class.

	Alfred Talbot Baker, b. May 29, 1907
	m. Ruth Whitten, Apr. 30, 1913
	Virginia Talbot Baker, b. Feb. 2, 1914
Address	111 Pinckney St., Boston

In the summer of 1912 he decided to go to Australia to visit his eldest son, Charles, who had settled there, and planned to go by way of Vancouver, but, hearing of a college friend of another class who was in Europe and nearly blind, he changed his plan and concluded to go by way of Europe and Suez Canal, breaking the journey by a visit with his friend for a time. Accordingly he went abroad in August, 1912, and met his friend in Switzerland, but he himself soon after had trouble with his eyes and suffered from ill-health in other respects. Slowly and gradually he recovered his eyesight and improved in health. Meantime his friend had returned to the United States, but before Baker had recovered his health sufficiently to resume his journey the war began, and finally he returned to Boston in October, 1915.

On the journey back he was obliged to spend several weeks in London waiting to secure passage on a steamer, and during his stay there two Zeppelin raids occurred.

He is much impressed with the superiority of the services of government in Switzerland to what we have in our own country. For one illustration: All the railroads in Switzerland are controlled and run by the government, and for $15 one can purchase a third-class ticket good for a month, on which he can travel anywhere in Switzerland to the frontiers and all the time if he chooses. At one time he sent seven trunks by mail, simply putting on the necessary postage stamps.

*JAMES THACHER BOUTELLE

Born	Jan. 6, 1845, Cambridge
Parents	Charles Otis Boutelle and Susan Louisa Bartlett
In college	1863–67; Medical School 1867–71
Degrees	A.B. 1867; M.D. 1871
Married	Lucia F. M. Fenner, June 28, 1876, at Saratoga Springs, N.Y.
Died	Aug. 6, 1913, Hampton, Va.

He passed his childhood and youth in Cambridge, and in Waterville, Me., attended the public schools in both places, and was fitted for college in Cambridge.

After graduation he entered the Harvard Medical School in the fall of 1867.

On May 1, 1870, he was appointed a Surgical House Pupil in the Massachusetts General Hospital and continued in that position during that year. He received his degree at the Harvard Medical School in 1871.

He then began to practise his profession in Boston, taking an office at 1272 Washington Street, and became a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society. In September, 1874, he gave up his practice in Boston and after making a visit of a few months in Georgia and South Carolina he went to Hampton, Va., and commenced practice there January 1, 1875.

He was married to Lucia F. M. Fenner at Saratoga Springs, N.Y., on June 28, 1876.

In 1876 he was appointed a lecturer on Physiology and Chemistry to the students (colored) of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, founded by the late General Armstrong. He was County Physician for the County of Elizabeth City, which contains Hampton, during the years 1876, 1877, and 1880, and for the period of years 1882 to 1892 inclusive. In July, 1878, he was commissioned as United States Examining Surgeon for Pensions and still continued to hold that position in 1892. He became a member of the Virginia Medical Society and of the Peninsular Medical Society, and was President of the latter in the years 1885, 1886, and 1891. He was also President of the Hampton Musical Association and a member of the "Sons of the American Revolution."

In 1891 he was actively interested and engaged in establishing in Hampton the Hampton Training School for Colored Nurses and the Dixie Hospital.

A letter dated April 18, 1917, from Dr. H. D. Howe of Hampton to Dr. M. E. Webb of Wilton, N.H., formerly of Boston, an intimate friend of Dr. Boutelle, is as follows:

My dear Dr. Webb:

I am glad to write a little of the great debt this community owes to the life and work of my dear friend and preceptor Dr. J. T. Boutelle. He was the first man in this section to do surgery and for many years was practically the only one. He operated on cases from this and surrounding counties during a long period and the advances in surgical technique were always adopted by him.

It was not until 1891 that he had the advantages of any hospital facilities and the results he achieved before that time were really remarkable.

In 1891 the Hampton Training School for Colored Nurses and the Dixie Hospital was started, and Dr. Boutelle was one of the Incorporators. He was also in those early days chief surgeon, physician and lecturer to the nurses. This was the first institution for the training of colored nurses and its really wonderful success has been due, in no small part, to the devotion and untiring work of Dr. Boutelle. From one room the hospital has grown to a splendid brick structure accommodating 70 patients and a training school of 40 nurses.

Dr. Boutelle was the most unselfish physician I have ever known and was always ready to help and counsel his younger colleagues. Those of us who are endeavoring to carry on the work at the Dixie Hospital and in the community ask no more than to keep it on the same ethical standard that our dear friend placed it.

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) H. D. Howe.

The positions mentioned above filled by Dr. Boutelle show that he early gained and retained the confidence and esteem of the community in which he had cast his lot, and the record of his activities shows that in the field of medicine he carried the torch of civilization into a dark place in Virginia, one, however, probably no darker than many localities in our country to-day.

One of his reports shows also that in 1891 he joined with a friend in establishing a brick-manufacturing plant near Newport News, Va., which furnished a good many bricks in that city, and in the following year they enlarged the plant with the expectation of making a fair profit from it.

His friend, Dr. Webb, already mentioned, visited Boutelle for more than a month in the summer of 1913, from the early part of June to nearly the middle of July, and a letter from him received by the Secretary indicates the origin of the serious illnesses and breakdown in health from which Boutelle suffered during the last twenty-one years of his life.

Dr. Webb writes that in the early spring of 1892 "when operating on a patient at the Dixie Hospital he accidentally cut his thumb; but the critical nature of the operation would not admit of his stopping to dress his own wound until the operation was completed. His wound became infected and blood-poison ensued."

In July, 1892, he visited Dr. Webb in Boston and the latter advised him at once to seek the aid of the Massachusetts General Hospital. There he improved and after some months was able to return to Hampton and resume his practice in part, and from that and from outside business in which he was engaged he managed to live comfortably, although suffering frequent relapses. He, however, conscientiously abandoned all surgical operations in his practice.

In 1903 he broke down completely and for months hovered between life and death, but, to the surprise of his physicians, he gained slowly, although he was never able to resume his practice, becoming a confirmed invalid. When unable to go about his house and grounds, having a natural gift in drawing "he took up sketching and illustrating books and worked hard to support himself up to 1908, when he had another serious illness of several months, ending in almost total blindness and almost constant suffering from disease of the optic nerve. This was the final blow to his ambition, and the constant suffering, mental and physical, continued unabated until the end."

In the winter of 1913 a tumor appeared on his neck, which grew rapidly, soon affecting his breathing. He was admitted to the Dixie Hospital and the tumor was removed, examination proving its malignancy, but the wound healed and he was able to be taken back to his home, which, however, he never left again.

In the following June the disease returned with increased malignancy and rapidity, causing him at times intense suffering painful to behold, and often he was unable to lie down to sleep without the aid of powerful narcotics.

On the 14th of July, "after an exhausting coughing attack, accompanied by terrible suffering, he lapsed into unconsciousness from which he never rallied," and passed away on the 6th of August following.

In his letter giving this information, Dr. Webb adds: "I cannot close without remarking the respect and love entertained for him by the people of Hampton—people in all walks of life. Not a single day during the weeks I was there in Hampton passed without inquiries from the well-to-do, the poor, from families of the leading citizens, from the obscure. Scores called to offer sympathy, and the children he knew so well and who loved him constantly brought him fruit, flowers, food and nutrition that would please him.

"By the colored people he had loved so long and to whom he had been so kind and helpful, he was simply idolized."

Address (home) 540 West 145th St., New York

Lawyer in New York, devoting himself more particularly to the business of Commissioner, Passport Agent, etc., holding commissions from all the States and Territories of this country and from many foreign countries.

(For membership in fraternal societies and appointments, see page 47 of Secretary's Report No. 12, of 1907. See also Secretary's Report No. 13, of 1913, p. 49.)

In a letter received June 1 he details his musical history, and other accomplishments, writing:—

"When about ten years old I became organist of the Church of the Epiphany, Brighton, Mass., continuing until I went to the Civil War at sixteen. I supplied at St. Paul's (Episcopal) Church, Brookline, while its organist, our late classmate Clement K. Fay, was absent on vacation. Also in Brighton churches.

"This is our jubilee year: fiftieth anniversary of our Harvard Class of 1867; our approaching golden wedding comes September 10, 1917; fiftieth anniversary of my Consistory, Masonic, Scottish Rite, 32d degree."

He has been in poor health for several years and news lately received shows that he continues in about the same state of health.

Continues in the practice of law in Boston in partnership with Robert T. Hay. Changed his residence in August, 1914, to 114 Upland Road, Cambridge. His son, Philip L. Carret, entered Harvard University in September, 1913, and, having completed in three years his college work except one course for half a year, in September, 1916, he obtained leave of absence and entered the Graduate School of Business Administration, completing his academic course by taking one of the courses in that school, in which he spent one year. He was a member of the Harvard regiment formed in the year 1916, and enlisted in the Harvard Reserve Officers Training Corps when it was formed in February, 1917. He enlisted in the aviation service in July, 1917, and aftereight weeks in the Ground School at Tech., he was sent to New York early in October, 1917, and in the latter part of that month across to France to take training in flying there. He finished preliminary training there on April 19, 1918, and has since received his commission as a First Lieutenant in the U. S. Air Service, and is now taking further training in that line.

HEMAN WHITE CHAPLIN

Born	Apr. 9, 1847, Providence, R.I.
Parents	Jeremiah Chaplin and Jane Anne Dunbar
In college	1863–67; Degrees A.B. 1867; A.M. 1870
Married	*Martha Louisa Crowell, of Yarmouth, Mass., June 26, 1890; d. March 28, 1900
Children	Christine, b. Nov. 2, 1891
	Robert Tappan, b. Jan. 17, 1894; Litt.B. 1916, Princeton
	Henry Dunster, b. Dec. 17, 1894
Address	2206 Q St. N.W., Washington, D.C.

Has continued to live in Washington, D.C., engaged in law. Before the year 1913 he began work on a book which has just been published by John Byrne and Company, Washington, D.C. I give the title-page in full to show the scope of the work: "Principles of the Federal Law as Presented in Decisions of the Supreme Court, citing something over 3,500 Cases. 2 Dallas—241 U.S. (Congressional Legislation to February 1, 1917)."

In a letter to the Secretary dated June 7, 1917, he says:—

"My elder boy, Robert, has enlisted in Troop A, Cavalry, National Guard, District of Columbia. My second boy, Henry, has enlisted in the First Regiment Reserve Engineers, now at Fort Totten, Long Island, New York. My daughter (Christine Chaplin) is taking a Red Cross nursing course here with a view to service abroad. I, I may add, have joined the Home Guard here, resuming a status that I had from 1861 to 1865."

In a letter to the Secretary dated January 15, 1918, he writes:—

"My elder boy, Robert, was in camp in this country (here and at Anniston, Ala.) for several months as a private; but the last of October, as a result of a competitive examination (in which he stood very high), he got a Second Lieutenant's commission in the Regular Army, Coast Artillery Corps; and he is now in the second month of a four months' Artillery Training School at Fort Monroe, learning the science and practice of heavy guns.

"Henry's regiment sailed just after Commencement (I visited him shortly before), and reached France, via England, very early in August. He is attached to the British Army, with base at or near Amiens; and his letters are mailed indifferently at Amiens (British-censored) or at Beauvais (which I understand to be a French base); and while he is allowed to say little more than that he is well and is enjoying his work, I infer that he is on detail as an orderly interpreter in engineering, between British and French. (He speaks French.) It was a party from his regiment that were overrun by the Germans in Byng's advance and withdrawal."

In a letter to the Secretary dated May 21, 1918, he writes:—

"Robert is on duty as a First Lieutenant in the Coast Defences of Chesapeake Bay. Henry is still a private in the Eleventh Engineers. A part of his regiment, including his company, were called into the battle of Cambrai, and were engaged in it on the footing of infantry."

He has since written that Henry has been commissioned as Second Lieutenant of Engineers dating from May 10 last.

*WINTHROP LOUIS CHENERY

Born	Feb. 18, 1845, Cambridge
Parents	Winthrop Ward Chenery and Frances Louisa Fillebrown
In college	1863–67; Law School, Sept. 13, 1867–69; Degrees A.B. 1867
Married	Ruth Baldwin Holt, of Belmont, Mass., Apr. 4, 1871
Children	Winthrop Holt, b. March 8, 1872; A.B. 1897 (98); A.M. 1898; Ph.D. 1904; S.B. 1896, Mass. Inst. of Tech.
	Alice Ticknor, b. Nov. 25, 1882
	m. Chester Fitch, of Medford, Ore., Jan. 2, 1908
	Margaret Blaikie Fitch, b. Sept. 28, 1908
	Henry Sheldon Fitch, b. Dec. 25, 1909
	Ruth Virginia Fitch, b. Dec. 16, 1916
Died	Jan. 29, 1915, Belmont, Mass.

He was of Watertown ancestry and a descendant in the eighth generation from Lambert Chenery, one of the earliest settlers of that town. In his early childhood his parents removed to the district which in 1859 was incorporated as the Town of Belmont. Thenceforth he always lived in Belmont; attended the public schools there, and was fitted for college at Chauncy Hall School in Boston.

After graduation he entered the Harvard Law School and received the degree of LL.B. there in 1869. After he was graduated from the Law School he was "engaged in the general superintendence of the 'Highland Stock Farm' in Belmont." As he himself expressed it in one of his reports to the Secretary: "I have continued here in Belmont, having charge of some three hundred acres of farm, the business being principally raising blooded stock cattle and horses. I have also engaged on my own account in the insurance business to a limited extent, and have taken my share of what business there is in Belmont." On April 4, 1871, he was married to Ruth Baldwin Holt of Belmont. Two children, a son and a daughter, were born to him: Winthrop Holt Chenery, born March 8, 1872 (H. C. 1897 A.B., 1898 A.M., and 1904 Ph.D.), for some time Professor of Spanish and Italian at Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., but for some years past Librarian of that University; and Alice Ticknor Chenery, born November 25, 1882, now wife of Chester Fitch of Medford, Ore. He continued as manager of the Highland Stock Farm until the year 1885, when he sold it. He began his insurance business in 1871 and continued in it up to the time of his last illness.

His classmates will remember his humorous way of putting things, and this is shown in some of his reports to the Secretary. Writing to the Secretary in 1876 (Report No. 5, p. 9, from which a quotation has already been made above) he says:—

"My fellow-citizens, seeming to fear that I should have too much unemployed time, and remembering that 'Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do,' determined to get ahead of the old boy; they have, accordingly, put me on the Board of School Committee, where I have served four years, the past year as Chairman. At March meeting, this year, I was elected Town Treasurer, Collector of Taxes, and one of the Board of Assessors. So, just now, I bear my blushing honors thick upon me. Yet I am not proud, and will come to the class supper if possible."

A further gleam of this humor appears in his letter to the present Secretary, printed in Report No. 13, of 1913, page 14, where he says:—

"On the occasion of the semi-centennial of the incorporation of the town in 1909, I prepared a historical sketch,—a fact which speaks volumes for the scarcity of 'literary fellers' among us. I sent a copy of same to Lincoln, which you will probably find among the archives of '67, and it may prove useful to you in case of an attack of insomnia."

But let not mention of this humor withdraw attention from his solid qualities. His fellow-citizens of the town early appreciated his character and capacity, as is shown by his election to the offices above mentioned, member of the School Committee for four years, Town Treasurer, to which office he was elected annually for thirty-two years, and Town Clerk for twenty-five years, offices to which his fellow-citizens would doubtless have continued to elect him up to the time of his death had he not declined re-election in March, 1908. He was elected Treasurer of the Belmont Savings Bank at the time of its organization in 1885 and continued as such for twenty-seven years, and in January, 1911, he was chosen a Trustee of that institution.

He died January 29, 1915, after several weeks' illness, and was survived by his widow and two children. His funeral took place on Monday, February 1, in the Unitarian church at Belmont, of the Society of which he had long been a member. The church was crowded with his friends and townspeople, who had gathered to do honor to his memory. An appreciation of him published in the Boston Transcript some days later, and the memorial address delivered at the services at the Unitarian church by the Rev. Hilary Bygrave, seem worthy of permanent preservation, and these follow in the order mentioned:—

"Winthrop Louis Chenery. On Monday of last week Belmont laid away one of its representative and most honored men, Winthrop Louis Chenery. Such a loss calls for a word of appreciation. Mr.

Chenery spent his life in Belmont, did his business there, and for years was the town's clerk and treasurer. His was the familiar figure on its streets. Everybody knew him and trusted him, and those who knew him best honored and loved him most. It was quite unnecessary for him to win confidence; he seemed to have it instinctively. If a laboring man had $50 to invest or came to differences with his neighbor or employer he sought Mr. Chenery's advice; if a woman would make a will, Mr. Chenery must be one of the executors. They assumed his interest; they valued his judgment, and his integrity was so axiomatic they never even debated it. His was a fine simplicity and sincerity; the simplicity of a heart that knew no guile; a sincerity sometimes direct and plain-spoken, yet never inconsiderate or unkind. Men were even drawn to his directness and frankness, for, though he had a keen sense of humor and a mind of more than common discernment, they knew his humor would never seek their discomfiture, even as his discernment would never publish their weakness. He judged but as he would be judged, and with ever a greater lenience. His was a signally useful life, signally wholesome in its influence and attractive in its ways. 'His strength was as the strength of ten because his heart was pure.' Fortunate the town that, numbering such as he among its citizens, summons them to its service, appreciates them while they are living, and honors their memories when they are gone. R.H.C."

"AN APPRECIATION

"Given at the funeral exercises, February the first, 1915, in the Unitarian church at Belmont by the Reverend Hilary Bygrave, for fifteen years pastor of the church, and a personal friend of the deceased.

"Some of us remember Gustavus C. Holt, not alone as an able man of business, not alone as a useful and honored citizen, but as one who had a fine literary gift, as one who showed himself to be a master of English whenever he could be induced to make a public address. When his friend Frank Chandler, himself an honored citizen of this town, passed away, Mr. Holt composed a little poem which it is very fitting that I should read over the mortal remains of the choice spirit whose loss we now and shall long deplore:—

> "'We are here to-day, and gone to-morrow;
> We are born and flourish for a time,
> Then fade away and disappear.
> Yet, "there is no death,
> What seems so is transition."

We are like the dust blown by the wind,
Or the mist that hangs over the meadow in the morning,
Or the water of the brook that is past,
Or the waves that rush on the shore,
Or the empty shell on the beach,
Or the shadow that flees before the sunshine,
Or the leaves that fall in the forest.
Each in a silent and mysterious way moves and passes on;
Yet lives again somewhere, somehow.
We are here to-day, we are there to-morrow.'

"There is a fine reticence in these lines on a matter about which no one has a right to be loquacious, and at the same time there is expressed an ample faith, an assured trust, in the Immortal Life itself. It is only too sadly true that the friend we have lost is no longer here, save as an influence for good—for uplift and the cleansing of our hearts and lives, if we will have it so. There can be nothing finer or better than to say that he has gone elsewhere—but not out of something into nothing, like a mist dissolved, or like water spilt upon the ground.

"If there is one truth, of which men of science, men of knowledge and of wisdom, are most assured, it is that in all the universe there is no such thing as waste—as loss of essence or of power. And so with a quiet assurance, and yet a most profound conviction, I venture to say that all that is meant by the personality of him whom we affectionately called Winthrop Chenery persists, and finds a function and some other opportunity for service in the Vast Beyond.

"And what a personality it was! How rich and many-sided! How simple and yet how noble! His very idiosyncrasies the more endeared him to us. In him were blended the spirit of a charming child, the soul of a philosopher, and the heart of a saint.

"There was in him something of the rigidity of the Puritan along with the tenderness of Saint John, the beloved disciple. He had a whimsical wit, a fine vein of humor, and a great sense of justice. His charity was an ample cloak for the follies and mistakes of men; whatever his thoughts and opinions were, he spoke no ill of any single soul.

"He was cast in a large mould, not only as regards his physical frame, but in his moral and intellectual portions. I feel sure there is not a man here who will begrudge my saying, he was 'the noblest Roman' of us all.

"A great assurance goes a long way towards success. He might have gone high and far had he had a more blatant and pushing disposition.

The innate modesty of his nature of necessity confined his influence in a too restricted sphere. Only those of us who knew him intimately were aware of the abundant knowledge and rare wisdom he possessed. In a thousand ways this community at large and many humble people therein have been guided by that wisdom and found a benefit from that knowledge.

"If he was ever given to speaking of himself he might repeatedly have said with the great Apostle, 'Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I unto thee'; and how many left him strengthened and blest some of you know as well as myself.

"Of silver and gold he gave away more than anybody knows save the All-Seeing Eye; but he did something more and better than that—he gave time, he gave thought, he gave sympathy, and understanding, and love. Little children loved him, large as he was; perhaps that formed part of his fascination for them. His very shadow falling upon us seemed to bless us.

"I am speaking not alone from observation but from personal experience when I say that he was of the number of those who pass 'the Cup of Strength to souls in some great agony, who kindle generous ardor, feed pure love, beget the smiles that have no cruelty,' who are the 'sweet presence of a good diffused,' like sunlight on the plains, or like those streams that make the meadows lush with greenness, flashing everywhere.

"He had all the honors he craved, and the esteem, the confidence, and the affection of all classes and conditions of people in this community. He was our tower of strength. The manliness within us rose up to meet the manliness in him. We knew he could not lie; we knew he would take no graft; we knew he could not cringe or fawn for the sake of place or power. We knew that he never thought to serve himself by masquerading as the friend and servant of the people. Oh, yes; in these meretricious times, in this day of unreality and ostentatious display, he was as 'the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.'

"Not soon or often shall we see his like again—not until men and women everywhere shall look to find reward and joy in service itself, and not in prominence or advantage for themselves. Oh, yes; we loved and trusted him absolutely. I think he must have been conscious of this while he was with us. If he did not fully realize it, be sure the knowledge has come to him in that transcendent light whither he has gone. He, no less than a greater than he, sees of 'the travail of his soul and is satisfied.' The Supreme Benediction, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant,' has been passed upon him—the loveliness of his selflessness has been manifested to him—he sees himself as God sees him, and his joy is complete, his Everlasting Peace assured. For souls of such high worth there can be no extinction. The Source and Soul of all that is is no bungler. All things will make the full circle. Sleep presupposes waking; death is not the end of life. There is more to follow:—

"'So Love may dream and Faith may trust—
Since he who knows our need is just—
That somewhere meet again we must.

Alas! for him who never sees
The stars shine thro' his cypress trees,
Who hopeless, lays his dead away—
Nor looks to see the light of day,
Across the mournful marble play—
Who hath not learned in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever lord of death,
And Love can never lose its own.'"

Lawyer in Boston and Justice of the Municipal Court of the Dorchester District of Boston.

He reports to the Secretary "no changes of residence or occupation, . . . since 1873 when the house was built in which we have since lived, always!"

In reply to the question "Where have you been, and what have you done," he writes:—

"In 1907, upon the graduation of my daughter at Smith College, I went with her and her mother on our first trip to Europe, sailing from Boston June 26, with a small party of friends, and landing at Liverpool July 5th. We spent some time in North Wales and in London; and landing at Ostend visited Bruges, Brussels and Antwerp, and thence saw Holland in the ancient way, going by the canals via Dordrecht and Rotterdam to Delft. As in America, this fascinating method of travel was even then almost superseded by the more rapid railroad. So, from Amsterdam, we went by rail to Cologne and up the Rhine to Bingen. Then, after about a month in wonderful Switzerland, we returned by way of Geneva and Paris, to Liverpool, and arrived home in Boston, October 17th.

"Verily, the first journey in Europe is an absorbing and wonderful experience, unlike anything in our prosaic and crude American life!

"In the Summer of 1912 we crossed the Mississippi River for the first time and spent a month in Colorado Springs, in Estes Park, and in the weird and gruesome Yellowstone Park, where I made a large collection of the novel Western plants.

"Again, in the Summer of 1913, we visited Europe, this time travelling from Naples north through Italy, the beautiful Tyrolese Alps of Austria, to Vienna and Berlin and Bremen. It was the year before the terrible war, which has since ravaged the apparently peaceful country through which we passed, and where we spent many interesting and pleasant days. At the little Alpine hotel at Karersee, in the Tyrol, where we tarried, were with us an Englishman and his wife from Liverpool, and a very intelligent merchant from Vienna. The latter spoke English fluently, was most genial, was much in our company, and took pleasure in conversing with us about America, our distant country and home, and our customs and language. There was, however, a marked difference in his attitude towards our friends from Liverpool, for whom he cherished an animosity which he took no pains to conceal. At that time, of course, his discriminating behavior attracted little attention, and was quite inexplicable; but to-day in retrospect, its reason and nature are quite comprehensible. And yet this little episode was all that we can now recall in any way indicative of later hostility or suggestive of the dire conflict which so soon developed between the nations! We had friends in Germany and lived with them familiarly in their homes, but there was never any intimation or suspicion of hatred or war.

"In the beautiful and peaceful valleys and slopes of the Tyrolese Mountains I fully gratified my love for Nature and the Alpine flowers. I collected there and elsewhere in Europe a large and valuable lot of wild plants which have been exhibited at the rooms of the Appalachian Mountain Club, in Boston, and are now preserved in my extensive private Herbarium, with a very complete representation of their American congeners, relatives, and friends. These and their environments are and were ever symbolic of peace and good-will. 'How lovely are the Messengers who bring us the gospel of peace!'"

No changes in family circumstances.
As to public offices:—

"I still hold the office of Justice of the Municipal Court of the Dorchester District of the City of Boston, to which I was appointed by Governor Claflin more than forty-six years ago! I believe this to be the oldest judicial appointment now held by any incumbent in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. I also believe that it is the longest consecutive term of office ever held by any Judge in the Commonwealth!

"Meanwhile the population of the District included within its jurisdiction has increased from 12,261 to 125,000 souls, according to the census reports, and the character of the population has also changed very greatly. There has resulted an immense increase in the business transacted in the Court.

"In the Dorchester Magazine for July, 1915, there was published a brief history of 'Our Local Court' from which I venture to extract the following somewhat personal lines: 'The Court was established in 1870. The first Justice, Thomas F. Temple, resigned, after serving a few months, to become the Registrar [Register] of Deeds for Suffolk County. . . . Upon the resignation of Judge Temple the Governor appointed as Justice, Joseph Richmond Churchill, who ever since January 9, 1871, has presided over the Court, with credit to himself and honor to the district.'"

As to authorships:—

"My only publications have been of botanical character and in the pages of Rhodora, the Journal of our New England Botanical Club. In Vol. 18 (June, 1916) I published an account of the occurrence of 'Lappula Deflexa in Vermont.' I think other publications are all mentioned in former Class reports."

*FRANKLIN JUDSON CLARK

Born	June 6, 1842, Mason Village, N.H.
Parents	John Clark and Amelia Phelps
In college	1863–67; Degrees A.B. 1867
Married	Mary E. Chency, of East Boston, Mass., Dec. 31, 1868 Margaret Dow, January, 1892, at New York
Children	*Millie Ammidown, b. Apr. 2, 1872 *Fannie Jeanette, b. Sept. 1, 1876; d. March 17, 1877
Died	Dec. 5, 1914, Portland, Me.

His parents moved to Boston during his boyhood and there he attended the public schools and was fitted for college. He was twenty-one years old when he entered college, several years older than the great majority of his classmates, and always gave the impression of a man of strong and solid character. He was strong in body also and interested in athletics; he was a member of the '67 crew which took part in two Harvard scratch races on the Charles River in October, 1865, and of the '67 crew in the regular Harvard regatta on the Charles River in June, 1866. He was interested in religion and became a member of the Christian Brethren Society. He had parts in his course as follows: in the Junior Exhibition, October 7, 1865, "A Greek Version"; in the Senior Exhibition, May 7, 1867, "A Dissertation 'Roman Virtue in the Second Century'"; and in the Commencement Exercises, July 17, 1867, "A Disquisition 'De Tocqueville's Prophecies.'" That he was of exceptional capacity and attainments in college is shown by the fact that he was eighth in the rank list of his class for the whole course and that he was elected a member of the Phi Beta Kappa in the Senior year.

After graduation he went into business with his father in Boston as a manufacturer of woollen goods and fire-engine hose.

On December 31, 1868, he was married to Miss Mary E. Cheney, a daughter of the Rev. D. B. Cheney of East Boston. Two children were born to them; a daughter Millie Ammidown on April 2, 1872; and a second daughter Fannie Jeanette on September 1, 1876, but the latter died in infancy, March 17, 1877.

His father died in 1877 and he sold out his business in Boston and removed to the Pacific Coast, settling in Colton, San Bernardino County, Cal. Here he lived for several years, during which time he became a Trustee in the Colton School District. He mentions also in his report to the Secretary that he had lectured in California on "The Old New World," and that he was a member of the Masonic order. After settling in California he paid special attention to the study and practical working of mines, became interested in several silver mines in Arizona, and for some years lived in that State, his address at that period being Silent P.O., Yuma, Ariz. Finally, in 1881 he consummated the sale of the "Black Rock," "Pacific," and "Blue Rock" mines in the silver district in that State "to Boston parties, taking a large interest himself, and superintending operations there."

Soon after this time he returned to the East and resumed his original business of manufacturing woollens, becoming the proprietor of the Moosehead Mills in East Wilton, Me., and making his residence there. In September, 1894, he sold out his mill interest, retired from business, and removed to Farmington, Me. He visited Europe in the summer of 1896.

He was divorced from his first wife, by whom he had two daughters, both of whom are dead.

His second wife was Margaret Dow. She was a beautiful woman, and he lived very happily with her for thirteen years, when she became suddenly hoplessly insane. Their home was in Farmington, where Mr. Clark had a beautiful residence, surrounded by every comfort, which was his home up to the time of his death. Clark was a noble fellow, in every sense of the word, kind-hearted, generous, good, and greatly missed by many.

Clark was fond of hunting and fishing and had a choice collection of rifles, guns, fishing-rods, and equipment. In his house at Farmington were quite a number of mounted heads of deer and other animals which he had shot. It was his custom every fall when the law was "off" on the hunting of deer to make a trip into the Maine woods to pursue his favorite sports. He had gone on such a trip in the fall of 1914 and after a stay of some weeks was suddenly taken ill with some trouble of the bowels. His two guides were obliged to carry him quite a number of miles out of the woods, and he was taken to the St. Barnabas Hospital in Portland, Me. An operation was performed, but he failed to recover from it and died on December 5, 1914.

Note.—The following biography of our classmate Cushing was prepared in part from information furnished by the several Class reports, but chiefly from an account of his life prepared by his daughter, Miss M. Magdalen Cushing.

He spent all of his life in Boston, except occasional periods of travel for study or recreation. He received his education and was fitted for college at the Chauncy Hall School in Boston, of which his father, Thomas Cushing, was for many years the principal, and which at the time of his attendance was situated on Chauncy Street. His mother was a woman of unusual mental ability, who received a degree of education quite uncommon for the women of her time. Thus from both parents he inherited a love for literature and the classics which remained with him during his whole life.

As a boy he spent his summers at North Scituate and early developed a love and knowledge of the sea and of boats. When but fifteen years of age he went around Cape Ann in an open fifteen-foot boat with but a dog for company and a compass for guide. At this time he was very anxious to become a sailor, but was persuaded by his uncle, Charles Baldwin, to go to college first.

At the first Junior exhibition, October 7, 1865, a Latin version was assigned to him, and at the last Senior exhibition, May 7, 1867, he had a part, "A Disquisition 'The Californian Miner.'"

In the program of Commencement Day exercises, July 17, 1867, he delivered an essay, "Boston as Described by Travellers in the Last Century." He was elected a member of Phi Beta Kappa in 1875.

After graduation he entered the Harvard Medical School in the fall of 1867, staying there through the first school year, but, believing that at that time there were greater opportunities for the study of medicine in New York, he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University in the fall of 1868, and passed one school year there, returning, however, to the Harvard Medical School in the fall of 1869. But he stayed there only a few months, as he spent the winter of 1869–70 in Europe, whence he returned in the fall of 1870, again entering the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York. He was graduated and received a degree there in March, 1871.

In the following month of April, as the result of a competitive examination, he entered Bellevue Hospital in New York as an interne and remained there for one year; he again went to Europe in May, 1872, and studied medicine two years, for most of the time in Vienna. There he met Maria Magdalena Ralenowsky and married her December 27, 1873. Returning to Boston in June, 1874, he entered general practice, spending his summers for several years after 1876 at Nantasket, where he also practised. At this time he was especially interested in diseases of the nose and throat, and he was appointed physician to out-patients in the department of diseases of the throat in the Boston City Hospital in January, 1877. In March, 1885, he went to Europe for the special study of surgery and the diseases of women. He returned in October, and thereafter devoted himself exclusively to those departments of medicine. During his stay abroad he visited Berlin, Vienna, Paris, London, and other places, spending much of his time in Berlin, "where he worked with and assisted Dr. August Martin, the foremost worker in the world in the then new field of abdominal surgery." Dr. Martin's book "Pathology and Therapeutics of Diseases of Women" was translated and published by Dr. Cushing in 1890. "The book was illustrated with original photographs reproduced by the newly discovered halftone process. Dr. Cushing was a pioneer in micro-photography and his micro-photographs in this publication were the first ever reproduced by this process. On his return from Europe in 1885 he published several articles on the relation of bacteria to disease, then a new and much combated theory. He also was the first man in Boston to demonstrate the tubercle bacillus, which had been discovered by Koch in 1882."

Soon after his return he became associated with Dr. H. O. Marcy in conducting a private surgical hospital for women. In 1886 he was appointed secretary for the section of diseases of women of the Ninth International Medical Congress, to be held at Washington in September, 1887. In October, 1886, he was appointed surgeon in charge of the Free Surgical Hospital for Women in Boston and held the position until July, 1888. In 1887 he established a medical journal, Annals of Gynecology, and became the editor. The present title of it is Annals of Gynecology and Pediatry.

"In 1890 he visited Europe again as a delegate to the Tenth International Medical Congress at Berlin and was absent about three months. At that time he had the honor of being presented to the present empress of Germany; his impression of her was of a simple and very charming woman."

In 1892 he established a private hospital for women on Parker Hill Avenue in Roxbury, and in connection with it a training-school for nurses. "The hospital was the great interest of his later life and has expanded into a general surgical and maternity hospital with a very efficient training-school."

In 1894 he became a member of the original faculty of Tufts College Medical School with the title of Professor of Gynecology, and in 1898, Professor of Gynecology and Abdominal Surgery. In this latter year he received the degree of LL.D from Tufts College.

About 1905 Dr. Cushing was appointed a trustee for the Robert Breck Brigham Hospital. This meant considerable work, but it was a labor of love on his part, as he enjoyed helping to plan the buildings and later watching them go up almost stone by stone.

Of his life after 1907 until the summer of 1913 he gave a most interesting account in a letter to the Class Secretary, which appears in his Report No. 13 of 1913, page 18.

For about a year before his death Dr. Cushing's health began to fail. To those who watched him and saw him forced to give up one by one his beloved works, the retention of his mental vigor unimpaired to the end seemed a partial and fitting recompense for a lifetime of devotion to his home, his friends, and humanity.

Dr. Cushing was an Episcopalian, and a man of deep religious feelings. He had a wide knowledge of the history and literature of the Church, meeting the clergy on their own ground and frequently astounding them by his knowledge of many of the finer theological points as well as by his quotations from works theological. He knew the Bible as but a few men of today know it.

He will be remembered by a host of grateful patients whose sufferings he alleviated or removed; by hundreds of students who sat under him and were permitted to dip deeply into the well of experience and kindly wisdom of his mind; by a large group of practitioners who turned to him often as a last resort in troubles which were beyond their capacity of solution; and by many friends to whom his amazing memory (he could produce an apt quotation for any situation which might arise), his delightful optimism, his gentle humor, and his splendid faith in humanity were a source of joy.

He is survived by his wife, five daughters, and four grandchildren.

In addition to the positions filled by him already mentioned he was a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, American Medical Association, and Boston Gynecological Society.

He still continues in the practice of medicine as medico-legal expert as before. Has changed his office from 161 Tremont Street, Boston, to 34 School Street.

A good photographic portrait of him was recently taken by J. E. Purdy & Co., of Boston, for the Boston Medical Library collection of portraits of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

He has also given the following information:—

"C. M. Holland, husband of my second daughter Anna, is the Tunnel Engineer of the New York Public Service Commission, who designed and has charge of the construction of the several tunnels being built between New York City and Brooklyn, at the cost of some twenty millions."

*WILLIAM FRANKLIN DAVIS

Born Aug. 21, 1840, Attica, N.Y.
Parents Joseph Bennett Davis and Manilla Hibard Jenkins
In college 1864–67; 1869–70; Degrees A.B. 1867
Married Caroline Emma Kelley, of Exeter, N.H., July 23, 1867
Children adopted Dec. 24, 1877, Eva Leavens, b. June 22, 1873 adopted May 1, 1880, Alice Gardner, b. June 3, 1877 adopted May 15, 1896, Carolyn Rosamond, b. May 8, 1896; B.S. 1917, Simmons Died May 26, 1916, Everett, Mass.

NOTE.—The following admirable biography of Davis was prepared by our classmate Cook, his friend and chum.

His father was a preacher of the Free-will Baptist denomination and changed his pastorate from time to time. After Davis was twelve years of age, he worked in mills at Manchester, N.H., and at Lowell and Carver, Mass., until he was twenty-one years old. He then entered Phillips Exeter Academy, and was graduated from there in 1864, entering Harvard as a sophomore at the age of twenty-three. He accomplished his studies in the class of 1867 with credit, and in some departments with distinction. On October 8, 1864, he was awarded a first prize of $30 for reading. As a member of the Harvard baseball nine, he took part in six games in June and July, 1865, in all of which the nine was victorious. At the first Senior Exhibition, October 23, 1866, he read an essay "Politics in the Pulpit," and again on Commencement day, July 17, 1867, an essay on "Turning Sport into Business."

On July 23, 1867, he married Caroline Emma Kelley, youngest daughter of the Hon. John Kelley of Exeter, N.H. After graduation from college, he taught in the Boston Latin School for two years, when he resigned his position and took a year's post-graduate work in philosophy at Harvard. His work at the Boston Latin School was a noteworthy success. He acquired a singular moral control over unruly students and was exceptionally efficient in the work of the classroom. During these years he paid in full considerable debts incurred in his college course. His father had not favored his ambition for an education, and had not been able to assist him.

He was strongly urged to continue with the Boston Latin School, being assured of early promotion. The promise of usefulness which his work had given was such that he was advised by high authority to devote his life to the work of public instruction. He was all his life a careful and laborious student, and a fresh and incisive expositor of his conviction. But he declined the advice to continue to teach in the Boston Latin School, as he had dedicated himself to the work of the Christian ministry; and in preparation for this after his year of post-graduate work in philosophy at Harvard he removed to Andover, Mass., in 1870, where he studied for two years in the theological seminary. A call was soon extended to him from the Free-will Baptist Church of Olneyville, R.I., where he was ordained in 1872 and continued for two and one-half years, until May, 1875. He felt, however, the prior call of people ungathered and unserved, and on October 1, 1875, took up work as a missionary at the Boston North End Mission, among the miscellaneous throng of people who congregated in the slums of that part of the city. After two and a half years of successful work, most of the time as superintendent of the Mission, during which time he became a permanent resident of Everett, he judged that this was not the field of human need which answered most fully the call of his vision. He resigned his position and devoted a year entirely to study and personal preparation for the work of wider evangelization, in which he felt sure he would find his true sphere of service. Looking for this yet undesignated field he was led to write to a superintendent of Home Missions in Michigan, asking for "the hardest and most needy field in the West." The reply came speedily, "Michigan and Wisconsin."

To this call he responded in the winter of 1880. He found the field, which seemed to answer the quest of his soul, in the lumber camps where forty thousand young men toiled during the winter in the depths of primitive forests, under conditions of great physical, moral, and spiritual exposure. Without personal acquaintance in the region, and with no guarantee of financial support,—with little more money in hand than sufficient to pay his travelling expenses, he made the venture and succeeded.

He gave ten strenuous years to the forests, the lumber camps, the mill towns and villages of that great industry. His work won public approval, and when these years of pioneering and organization had resulted in establishing it as a recognized and important public utility, he relinquished it and turned his feet into other less frequented paths.

During the following years he was employed in various activities, some of them involving enterprises of considerable magnitude,—always, however, under conditions which brought his work within the scope of the Christian ministry, to which he had consecrated himself, and which to the end he pursued with unswerving devotion. In this period occurred the singular and notable incident of his imprisonment briefly in 1887, and later in 1896 and 1897, for a year in the Charles Street Jail of Boston. He believed that the police ordinance requiring a special permit to hold a public meeting upon public ground was an unwarranted limitation of the constitutional liberties of citizens in Massachusetts. He thought it a worthy public service to contest it in the courts. Concerning the legal proprieties of Mr. Davis's trial and imprisonment one need not here inquire. It is thoroughly discussed in a volume of 160 pages written by Mr. Davis while serving the longer sentence, entitled "Christian Liberties in Boston." I would only say that for years previously the public grounds of the city of Boston had been systematically closed against public addresses even from some of its most honored citizens and institutions. As a result of the public interest awakened by the trial and conviction of Mr. Davis, the policy of exclusion has been reversed, and permits have been freely granted. Many worthy and accredited agencies of moral and spiritual influence have entered the gates of opportunity which his conscientious devotion and persistency had opened.

It is no easy task to follow and summarize Mr. Davis's activities during the years that followed his release from confinement. During the former years he was engaged in work more defined, organized, and localized. The later years were equally or even more strenuous in their activities and intense in their devotion. He was ever on the wing, yet not aimlessly nor fruitlessly; but in fields, social conditions, and occasions so separated and varied that the harvest could by no man's hand be gathered into definite sheaves for accounting.

Like John Wesley, he might have said, "The world is my parish." One of his reports to the Class Secretary was summarized into, "Occupation: Preaching the gospel in Massachusetts and ten other States of our country." "Preaching the gospel" was in his manner of ministry a service manifold and of wide inclusion. It was no mere matter of "Get a church"; or "Hire a hall." Such it might be; but more often, "Go ye into all the world, and as ye go, preach." Few were the days, few even were the waking hours, within which that clear, clean-cut, vibrant voice did not awaken attention, or even with penetrating insistence startle some slumbering conscience by the wayside.

On one occasion he reached Boston, returning from a trip far afield, on a Saturday afternoon. For the next day the record runs: "Walked into the city; attended the meeting of the Society of Friends at 10.30 A.M.; attended the meeting of the Sunday-school at 12 M., and at 2 P.M. preached on the Common, a service of an hour and a half, to five hundred people." Add to that, wayside words, and other ministries, casual, but definite, and you have a not unusual day's service. Few lives have a content of ministries so manifold and definite, and few men in any generation have been qualified as he was, by nature, by grace, and by exact, laborious, and comprehensive scholastic training, to sustain with success the peculiar exigencies of such a ministry. Yet the light of it, though always unmistakably clear and even startling, in its brightness, was so scattered and so far flung that it could not become an orb of steady illumination to a single community or region. Without a doubt, however, the gathered harvest will be plenteous.

There was at this time one instance of more outstanding and definite ministry too characteristic and significant to fail of mention. One of the visions of his early manhood, long cherished, found opportunity of expression which occupied a year of service. He had an ideal of a possible co-operation of Christian men in some large business enterprise which might illustrate the possibilities of brotherhood, as the organizing and efficient factor in the work of the world. This vision had hung long upon his horizon as a star of hope.

In the office of a friend he chanced to mention and unfold it in a casual way. He was overheard by an entire stranger, who happened to be there. He was a man of large wealth, and disposed to use it for the common good. He was interested, sought Mr. Davis's acquaintance, and offered to put his property, a large tract of valuable land in Philadelphia, and extensive coal lands in Pennsylvania, into the venture of the "Christian Business Bureau." For a year Mr. Davis was occupied in developing these properties into conditions suited to the realization of the organization suggested. At the last a disagreement in the family most interested frustrated his hopes. But in the prosecution of this work Mr. Davis came into some direct relations with large business interests in coal and railroads. He found encouragement for his enterprise from some business men whose names are familiar in the highest financial circles. This year was a unique and interesting experience, a chapter worthy of record, had we the material of it in more definite detail. It well illustrates his versatility, resource, and masterful manhood which might have achieved some distinguished success if he had cared, like other men, to use it for the winning of the prizes which bulk large "in the World's Wondering Eye."

Indeed he knew well how to pass by on the other side what to many would be coveted opportunity. When he was released from Charles Street Jail a reputable lecture bureau approached him with offer to assure him a lectureship for one hundred nights at $100 a night to speak at their appointment upon "Free Speech." To this offer he hardly took time to pause further than to say that his only and imperative business was to preach the gospel of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ.

When he appeared among us at college we were soon aware of the arrival of a personality; I think I may say the most unique and picturesque personality of our class, and perhaps of the whole student body of our day, unless we except Joseph Cook, with whom he had much in common. He was a man of splendid physique, one who aroused attention upon the street. Acquaintance confirmed the first impression. He was a man with a vision, a mission, and a voice. If in the olden time such a man had appeared among the people, and popular interest had awakened inquiry, some might have said, "He is a prophet,"—one who could dare to say with conviction and courage, "Thus saith the Lord." To some he was perhaps but a passing wilderness voice. For others he had a mission and a message, and to them he was a prophet. He was such, to my personal knowledge, to some of the men in our class. They had, and have, for him a warm and grateful memory. His voice had touched the depths in their nature.

I think we can distinguish three characteristic elements of mental and moral quality which made him a unique and impressive figure among us.

1. He had a commanding conscience, and he obeyed it at any cost. He was clear and final in his convictions, and he was consistently true to them. This was the fundamental and immovable foundation of his character.

2. He had an imperious spirit of self-giving, and he yielded himself to it without reserve. The quality of his mercy was not strained. It was to him literally "more blessed to give than to receive." The rule of the second mile was the rule of his highway.

He said to me once when we had been some time together in camp, "Chum, you work by sympathies; I work through antagonisms." This was true in a way, but not the whole truth. His strenuous and insistent antagonisms were rooted in urgent and constraining sympathies. Self-love was not the source of his contentions. It was always some other one whose right was invaded, whose welfare was imperilled, for whom he gave and took blows manfully and cheerfully. Herein he knew no fear and asked no favor; and whatever the contention, he bore therefrom no grudge.

Another man's need he took as his own. On one of his forest trips in the West he fell in with a poor fellow staggering under a bag of meal he was carrying to his family, some miles distant. The missionary took it on his stalwart shoulders and laid it down on the cabin floor. The man said, "No man ever carried my burden before." He gathered all the members of his family and led them to the service the missionary was about to conduct. The house of this classmate's soul was by the road, where wayfarers pass with weary feet and dust-stained garments. The stress of his wilderness and wayside ministries, unrecorded in the reports of organized missions, was such that while he saved many a wandering and lost soul, "himself he could not save."

To the majority of our class, who have seen and know him only in the years of his early enthusiasms, the ardor of zeal seemed perhaps more in evidence than the wisdom of gentleness. Some of us who have been nearer him in the details of his work and in the days of his maturity have seen in him the elements of a tempered and gentle spirit. He expressed in a noble and generous way what Professor Giddings of Columbia College designates as the great message of sociology to the present age, "a developed consciousness of kind." Like George Fox, the mystic leader of the Society of Friends, whose style of speech Mr. Davis adopted, his daily prayer might have been, "Lord, baptize me into a sense of all conditions of men."

3. Again; to those who were observant of him mainly in his public career, he may have seemed to live only in the solitary regions of high moral purpose,—of stern and strenuous endeavor. There was another side; they who came into terms of social intimacy found him the most genial and companionable of men. He abounded in wit, and was an excellent story-teller. He was quick to see the humorous elements in life. He had a wide and intimate experience with many varieties of people, in high and low stations. His fund of reminiscence and anecdote was unfailing and most entertaining.

He suffered many months of gradual physical wasting before he passed on. The atmosphere of those weary and waiting hours was that of patient resignation and steadfast assurance. Sympathetic memories blended with bright and cheering outlooks and uplooks. I was with him several times, and when I had the privilege of intimating to him expressions of remembrance and sympathy from classmates, he responded with grateful appreciation.

Taking estimate of his personality there comes to my mind the familiar line:—

"Strong son of God, immortal love."

He was a strong son of God. The root of his strength was an immortal love,—strong in the grace of love to bless that which helps men, strong also in the zeal of love to chide and reprove that which hurts men.

Our greatest bard has said of such as we account him to be, words which he would not choose, but hardly could decline:—

> "For thou hast been
> As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing,
> A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
> Hast taken with equal thanks; and blest are those > Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled
> That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
> To sound what stop she please."

His lot was no "flowery bed of ease." His path was trodden before him by One whose feet had been hurt, even to wounds and blood. It was no sawdust trail, amid popular applause, but a path of "much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings; by pureness, by knowledge, by longsuffering, by kindness, by the Holy Spirit, by love unfeigned; as unknown, and yet well known; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

Others, worthy, had trodden that path before him, and we are glad to think of him as with them at rest.

"On account of increasing years and scarcity of good help, have given up farming and have been living in Virginia most of the time since."

The Secretary has heard nothing from him this year (1918).

*JAMES STEELE ENGLISH

Born	March 6, 1844, Boston
Parents	James Lloyd English and Mary E. Steele
In college	1863–67; Degrees A.B. 1867
Died	Jan. 2, 1917, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

The Secretary is indebted for a large part of the material for this biography of our classmate, James S. English, to a friend of the latter, Sewall C. Brackett, Esq., of Boston.

Mr. Brackett when a boy was a neighbor of English in Jamaica Plain and knew him, and when he was fourteen years old English invited him to go with him to Campton in the Franconia Mountains to spend a vacation. Brackett's mother consented and he went with English that year for a week and afterward went each year with him and spent the entire summer there, until Brackett was graduated from Harvard in 1891. In 1885 Brackett's mother died, leaving him an orphan, and a year or two later when his brother with whom he had been living, moved away, English took him into his house and kept him as a member of his family for many years. After he was graduated from Harvard in 1891 he went into English's office to study law, and after he was admitted to the bar, Brackett stayed with English as an office associate for about a year, until he became a member of a law firm with the late Thomas J. Gargan.

When he was married, in 1897, he left English's house, but continued to live in Jamaica Plain as a neighbor of English and was intimately associated with him down to the time of his death.

English was fitted for college at the Public Latin School of Boston, graduating there in 1863. After graduation from Harvard he entered the office of his father, James Lloyd English (Harvard 1827), for the study of law, was admitted to the bar September 10, 1870, and was associated with his father in the practice of law until the death of the latter in 1883. Their offices were at 68 Cornhill and he remained there until he retired from practice in 1913.

I quote liberally from a letter written to me by Mr. Brackett giving an account of our classmate and his relations with him.

"His practice was almost entirely confined to probate proceedings, looking after wills and things of that kind for his clients, acting as executor and trustee, and advising with his clients and drawing papers for them. . . . He stated to me once that he never tried but one case in court, that he did not like that one and decided never to try any more. . . . His strongest forte was in drawing wills, especially trust wills, in which he was very proficient.

"He was in active practice from 1870 to 1913, and during that time drew many wills, some of which were called in question, but he was very proud to think that no will he had drawn had ever been broken; and he also stated that, although his father was in practice about fifty years, he never had but one will broken. . . . He was of the opinion that when a will was properly drawn it was so clearly and plainly stated that a controversy over its meaning could not arise, for the reason that the provisions set forth in the will when carefully examined could have but one meaning. He gave a great deal of time and careful thought to having his probate documents possess this characteristic."

Mr. Brackett gives an interesting account of English's ancestry.

His grandfather, Thomas English, who was born in Dublin in 1754, came to this country about 1785 as a supercargo and probably as a young merchant having some little means of his own, and married here Penelope Bethune, whose father, George Bethune, was a merchant living at the corner of Washington and Summer Streets, where Shuman's Corner is now. The son of Thomas English, James Lloyd English, father of our classmate, was a well-known lawyer of Boston for many years, and was once offered a position on the bench of the Court of Common Pleas. He declined on the ground that he would have to wear a black coat and a top hat all the time and comport himself in accordance with these garments, which with his independence of character would have been irksome to him. Mary E. Steele, the mother of our classmate, was the daughter of a well-known lawyer of Southern New Hampshire. Penelope Bethune, the wife of Thomas English, was the daughter of Mary Faneuil, whose father, Benjamin Faneuil, was the brother of Peter Faneuil, who built Faneuil Hall in Boston. The Bethunes were direct descendants of the Bethunes, who were barons of Balfour in Scotland. "These families, whose blood united in Mr. English, were all not only persons of quality but also people of substance, and he had in his house many interesting heirlooms and mementoes of them. Nevertheless, this aristocratic ancestry showed itself in him only in his high opinion of a gentleman's conduct, and his very strong sense of duty, of honor and of honesty. In ordinary matters he was most democratic and regarded but little, in personal affairs, the opinions or comments of others. He used to dress as he pleased, which was somewhat different from other people, go where he pleased, say what he thought, rather bluntly sometimes, whether people liked it or not.

"He was very kind and charitable and open to appeals from persons in need. . . .

"He had no brothers or sisters, nephews or nieces, uncles or aunts. During the latter part of his life two second cousins were his nearest relations and these he seldom saw.

"Being very fond of boys, he naturally lavished his affection and his assistance on them and from time to time gave practical help to a great many and for a good many years he took one or two away with him in the summer for a vacation. Those who were not in need of his material assistance he entertained in his house, had them around to supper and to dinner, played games with them and helped them with their studies, and all of them profited by his example and by his advice.

"Although he contributed to certain societies on a somewhat fixed basis, he did not care much for charitable societies, believing that a man should find no difficulty in discovering worthy objects of his bounty in his own acquaintances.

"He spent his summers, since I knew him, at West Campton at Stag-and-Hounds Inn until it burned down fifteen years ago, and after that he went to North Woodstock and he always enjoyed the mountains very much. He had great pleasure in taking long drives with a horse and a Concord wagon, in tramping over the hills, in gathering wild berries, and, while he was able to do so, in swimming and in various other country diversions, and he never tired of the beauties of that section of the White Mountains.

"About the year 1913, he retired from active practice and gave up his office at 68 Cornhill. After that, for a couple of years, he amused himself by long walks about Jamaica Plain and by reading, of which he was very fond. In January, 1915, he had a shock of some kind from which he recovered after two or three weeks so as to be up and around but from that time he began to fail and was affected by the more serious symptoms of hardening of the arteries, of which he finally died. . . . Being accustomed to doing as he liked and to being active and independent, it galled him a good deal to sit around and be waited on by others and not to be able to do as he wished. As weakness and disability increased, he felt more and more that his usefulness had passed away and that he should welcome his end."

He was a member of the Protestant Episcopal church and probably attended the Sunday-school of the Church of the Advent when a boy. His family at one time was connected with Trinity Church in Boston. "During his residence at Jamaica Plain he was always a member of St. John's Episcopal Church and for many years was a member of the Vestry, taking an active part, and always an active interest, in its affairs. For many years he taught in the Sunday-school, having classes of boys of a rather advanced age, whose interest it was difficult for other teachers to hold, but he always succeeded in interesting them."

Though living in the same house the number has been changed since the last report. Has been away only on professional business. He writes:—

"Son and grandchildren all well and doing well in a business way."

Under date of May 21, 1918, he writes:—

"After leaving Boston at the close of the annual exercises and festivities, which I enjoyed very much, I visited classmates in New York, visited friends and acquaintances in Philadelphia and Washington. Thence to Alexandria, Mount Vernon, and to Manassas, where my regiment saw service in 1862 [serving as corporal in Co. A, 68th Illinois Infantry]. Then via Montreal to Toronto, to the scenes of my boyhood. There I visited with a few remaining relatives. For like purpose I stopped at Detroit, Chicago, and Denver. Thence home via San Francisco, after a total round trip of about 11,000 miles, including highways and byways. Hope to make more trips to Harvard within the next few years."

Referring to his visit last year he adds:—

"One thing I did regret and that was that I got to see so little of nearly all our men. Fifty years, however, is a long time, and I was practically a stranger from a far land, and the war spirit and excitement were on."

[*CASSIUS JAMES GILMORE]

Address	197 Lincoln St., Marlboro, Mass.

In his reply to the circular of March 20, 1917, he writes:

"With neither poverty nor riches, owner of acres of land and forest and a home with garden fruit and vines; with a loving wife and dutiful children the babe they feared they never could rear is yet here, but the zero weather of February 21, 1914, took my wife, the blessed Mary Lizzie, away! So now it is less lonesome at my daughter's, 197 Lincoln Street, Marlboro, though the old home I built is still kept and its sunshine and fruits enjoyed.

"Have tried to fill the character of an upright, dutiful citizen. Written to Congressmen, Senators and Presidents."

He served on the Hudson Board of Health for six years in 1894 to 1899.

Address 1525 Walnut St., Berkeley, Cal.

In response to the Secretary's circular of March 20, 1917, he wrote, under date of April 17, that he did not expect to be able to come to the fiftieth anniversary, but after all he did come, as the classmates will remember. He said in that letter:—

"Since my last report to you, and since the last time I saw you, I have been jogging along on life's journey on an even and uneventful way, and I am living in the house in which I have dwelt for almost thirty-six years.

"I have just been re-elected without any effort on my part, and with a much increased majority, to the position of city auditor of our beautiful city, which position I have held for more than twenty-two years. I can but be highly elated at this repeated manifestation of the confidence and esteem shown by my fellow-citizens and neighbors."

A report received dated May 16, 1918, shows no change of circumstances since the last report.

*GEORGE VASMER LEVERETT

Born	Feb. 16, 1846, Charlestown, Mass.
Parents	Daniel Leverett and Charlotte Betteley
In college	1863–67; Law School, Sept. 12, 1867–69
Degrees	A.B. 1867; A.M. 1870; LL.B. 1869
Married	*Mary E. L. Tebbetts, of Cambridge, Apr. 3, 1888; d. June 5, 1897
Died	Oct. 18, 1917, Boston

NOTE.—The Secretary wishes to acknowledge his indebtedness to our classmate Ware for the preparation of the following fine biography of Leverett, whose loss has been deeply felt by all of us.

George Vasmer Leverett was born in the city of Charlestown, now a part of Boston, and came of the family which gave to the Colony of the Massachusetts Bay one of its famous governors, John Leverett, and to Harvard College another John Leverett, one of its learned Presidents. He attended the Harvard Grammar School, the High School, where he ranked first in his class, and entered Harvard with our Class in 1863. At the time of his entrance, as our men will recollect, he was tall and in appearance delicate. But in the course of the Freshman year, whether from practice in the gymnasium or by the processes of nature, or from both causes, he became possessed of the robust frame and superb muscular strength which were to enable him to do the vast amount of work he was to accomplish. Having graduated first scholar in our Class, he entered the Harvard Law School, where he took his LL.B. in 1869.

Leverett was instructor in Mathematics in Harvard from 1868 to 1870; in the latter year he received his A.M. from the College; in 1871 he was admitted to the Bar, and in the same year entered upon the practice of law in Boston with Prof. James B. Thayer of the Harvard Law School. In or previous to 1880 Leverett removed from Charlestown to Cambridge, where he resided with his mother until her decease, on December 10, 1884. Leverett married Mary E. L. Tebbetts, a first cousin, April 3, 1888. Mrs. Leverett having died in June, 1897, he moved from Cambridge to Boston, where the remainder of his life was passed.

Some ten years after we graduated, the invention of the telephone was announced. Those then of mature age will always remember the interest, not to say excitement, that was caused by this marvel of human ingenuity. The vast possibilities of the invention in the advancement of human affairs were soon grasped, but the lines and the means on and by which the great objects were to be brought to pass remained to be thought out and worked out. Now, in the light of what was done, it is easy to see what had to be done.

It was necessary to assemble aggregations of capital; corporations had to be formed with carefully defined rights of eminent domain; patents must be acquired, not only those for improvements on the original inventions, but for inventions and improvements on inventions, such as those of contrivances and instruments for switchboards and those that would make telephones and wires carry human speech under adverse conditions or over long distances. A great corporation was formed for activities nation-wide, joined with which were the divers local subsidiary corporations primarily to serve aggregations of communities. There was incessant requirement that legislation relating to every phase of the subject, both by Congress and the several state legislatures, should be comprehended and complied with. Actions had to be prosecuted and defended in the national and state courts. The foregoing is by no means an exhaustive enumeration of the measures and activities which were essential to establishing the telephone on a basis beneficent and permanent. It should also be kept in mind that the conditions required that development and progress be rapid. Many corporations were afield, and the general rivalry demanded that questions as they arose be forthwith pressed to conclusions. As the situation developed it became evident that the people of the nation could best be served—perhaps it should be said, could only be served—by one corporation, or by a very few select corporations whose interests were harmonious with each other and whose functions were rationally apportioned. The result is that of the many corporations the Bell Companies, so-called, have, in effect, alone been found fit to survive. Their wires stretch from ocean to ocean, while, by means of mechanical connections with the radios which have been contrived by men in the Bell Company's service, direct communication by speech has been had with islands and continents beyond. While prosecuting these stupendous undertakings those companies have rendered efficient and economical service to the public.

That those concerned in the development of this great enterprise must have been men possessed in high degree of character, judgment, and foresight goes without saying. Leverett is to be counted among those taking a leading part. He performed legal services for one or more of the Bell Companies from an early date in their history. He was appointed attorney for the American Bell Telephone Company in February, 1886. Some years later he became its general counsel. He subsequently become general counsel of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which acquired the assets of the former company, with offices in Boston and New York, and continued in that position until, at his persistent request, he was relieved of its duties, December 31, 1913. As consulting counsel, however, his connection with the company continued, though he retired from telephone work in New York City.

It is interesting to recall that John E. Hudson, our tutor in Latin during the Freshman year, was President of the American Bell Telephone Company during several years previous to his death, October, 1900.

The acts, duties, and responsibilities of the men who guided these great public interests were not conspicuous or spectacular. All the more reason why the nature of those duties and responsibilities should be recorded that Leverett and the men with whom he was associated may always be held in grateful recollection.

During his connection with the Telephone Companies, Leverett maintained his office as lawyer in Boston, held positions as trustee of substantial properties, and also held official positions in divers well-known corporations, some of which were, a director of the Conveyancers Title Insurance Co., a director of the State Street Trust Company, a trustee of the Franklin Savings Bank. He was a member of the Colonial Society of Massachusetts (sometime one of its Council), member of the Massachusetts Historic-Genealogical Society, fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, member of the Bostonian Society, the Bunker Hill Monument Association, the Union Club of Boston, the Harvard Club of Boston, the Harvard Club of New York, the University Club of Boston, and of other College clubs.

Some of Leverett's benefactions are known to individuals because it was necessary that they should be known in order to be effective. While we believe he would not want to have his gifts to charities and the like dwelt upon, his friends know and have the right to say that Leverett was a generous, big-hearted man.

Life in the woods not only gave Leverett genuine pleasure, but gained him solid rest and recuperation. Almost every summer since graduation he gave heed to the call into the wilderness. With two or three exceptions, when he went into the woods of Canada, all these sojourns were in the forests of Maine, generally with one or more friends. The Mastermans of the first, second, and third generation were his guides and fellow-woodsmen. Such a long course of companionship is eloquent testimony to Leverett's capacity for firm and enduring friendships.

The following tributes are appended.

From the Annual Report of the Directors of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company for 1915:—

"Since the last report was issued, Mr. George V. Leverett has compelled the Company to yield to his persistent request that he be relieved of his active duties in the Legal Department. His advice and counsel will continue to be available to the Company. Mr. Leverett was the Company's general counsel while the vitally important patent litigation which determined the validity of the Bell patents was in progress, and also during the transactions which culminated in the acquisition by the present Company of the assets of The American Bell Telephone Company, in which he had a most important part. His wise counsel and painstaking attention to its affairs have been essential elements in the Company's success, and his unfailing kindness and courtesy, and consideration for others, with his lovable personality, have endeared him to all of his associates."

Leverett for some years held a large number of shares of stock in the Conveyancers Title Insurance Company of Boston. In the year 1898 he was elected a Director of the Company and in the year 1913 when a vacancy occurred in the Finance Committee of the Board of Directors he was appointed a member of it and continued to hold both offices until his death. The Board of Directors adopted the following minute offered by Mr. Edes at the first meeting held by it after his decease:—

"George Vasmer Leverett died on the eighteenth of October, 1917. For nineteen years he was a member of this Board, and for five years a member of its Finance Committee. He brought to the Corporation, in which he was the largest stockholder, devoted service, sound judgment, sagacity, wisdom and a reputation for probity, fairness and high-mindedness, which enhanced the already high standing of the Company in this community. Amid the cares and heavy responsibilities of many trusts he gave to our affairs the most careful scrutiny and conscientious thought, and the benefit of his experience and of his wide knowledge of men and affairs. Eighty years ago, President Quincy characterized his noble and lovable predecessor, John Leverett, in words which may as fitly be spoken to-day of his kinsman, our late associate:

"'The abilities of Leverett seem to have been of a superior order. . . . His talents were eminently practical. He knew better than most men what course to shape in difficult times. . . . In all his official relations his industry, vigor, and fidelity were conspicuous and exemplary. He was a man more actuated by a sense of duty than by desire of fame. . . . He received through life the reward due to his fidelity, judgment and integrity. . . . In the character of Leverett there was no obtrusive display. . . . He studied not to gratify vanity, but to enable himself better to perform his duty. . . . A perfect fulfillment of whatever he undertook was the object to which he limited his endeavors. At this he aimed; in this he succeeded.'

"We shall miss his genial presence, his wise counsel, his loyal fellowship; and we wish to place upon our records this expression of our respect for our friend, and of our sense of the loss which, in common with the Corporation, we have sustained in his lamented death."

Leverett attended the Class Supper on the evening of June 20, 1917, and Commencement on Thursday, the 21st. For some time, however, he had not been in good health, and afterward his health still further declined, until in the early fall he became confined to his rooms in Boston and there died on Thursday, October 18, 1917. The funeral services for him were at the First Church in Boston on October 22.

*FRANCIS HENRY LINCOLN

Born	Apr. 14, 1846, Hingham, Mass.
Parents	Solomon Lincoln and Mehitable Lincoln
In college	1863–67; Degrees A.B. 1867; A.M. 1871
Married	Anna Frances Baker, of Hingham, Mass., June 1, 1875
Children	Francis Henry, b. Dec. 2, 1876
Died	July 7, 1911, Boston

NOTE.—In the Thirteenth Report of 1913 I did not publish a biography of Lincoln, but referred to a memorial of him printed and distributed by the Class in the fall of 1911, and the Memoir of him prepared by our classmate Horace Everett Ware for The Colonial Society of Massachusetts, which was reprinted from its publications and also distributed to the Class. It has seemed better now, however, to have a regular biography of him in this report, and that has been prepared by our classmate Mann largely from the publications above mentioned.

In his father's line he was descended from Samuel Lincoln, who came from Hingham, England, and settled in Hingham, Mass., in 1637. In his mother's line he was descended from Daniel Lincoln, who was in Hingham as early as 1644. He was also a descendant of Pilgrim Richard Warren, who came over in the "Mayflower" in 1620, and whose daughter married Robert Bartlett, who came over in the "Ann" in 1623. Three great-grandfathers, Jesse Bates, Welcome Lincoln, and Nathaniel Gill, were soldiers in the Revolutionary War. His father was a graduate of Brown University in 1822. Both his brothers were graduates of Harvard University.

He attended school in Hingham from 1850 to 1861, the last four years at Derby Academy. He completed his preparation for Harvard College at the private Latin School of Epes Sargent Dixwell in Boston, entering college in 1863 with the class. Graduating in 1867, he received the degree of A.M. in 1871. He was elected class secretary in 1873, and retained the office until his death. While in college he was a member of the Institute of 1770, the Harvard Glee Club, of which he was president, and the Hasty Pudding Club.

In September, 1867, he entered the employ of the dry goods firm of A. Hamilton & Co., in Boston. For a short period, subsequent to the great fire of 1872, he was in the office of Alexander S. Porter, real estate and mortgage broker. In June, 1873, he opened an office for himself, to conduct a general real estate and insurance business. In this he continued during the rest of his life. In addition, he constantly acted and advised in the settlement of estates and the administration of trusts.

He had many other interests, private and public. He was agent for the Hingham Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of which he was director and president. He was a member and president of the Massachusetts Mutual Fire Insurance Union; State vice-president of the National Association of Mutual Fire Insurance Companies; trustee and president of the Hingham Institution for Savings; trustee of Loring Hall and of the public library of his town; a member of the Hingham School Committee for three terms of three years, 1879–88, serving also as secretary and treasurer. He was moderator of the Hingham town meeting from before 1882 continuously for twenty-five years to 1907, when he declined re-election; director and president of Hingham Cemetery; clerk of the First Parish of Hingham; member of the Wompatuck Club, and its president 1902–03.

He was a member of the Colonial Society of Massachusetts, of the Society of Colonial Wars in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, of the Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, of the Bunker Hill Monument Association, and also its treasurer. He was a member of the New England Historic Genealogical Society, of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Indians and others of North America, of the Society for Promoting Theological Education, of the Society for Ministerial Relief. He was trustee of several charitable organizations, and of a number of other associations. He became a life member of the American Unitarian Association in 1892, and was its treasurer from 1898 until his death.

He was practically the editor of the History of Hingham, published by the town, and which occupied ten years in the preparation, contributing chapters on the town's Ecclesiastical History, Education, Public Conveyances, Fire Department, Public Institutions, Lodges and Societies, Native and Resident Lawyers, Native and Resident Ministers, and Miscellaneous Matters.

He married in Hingham, June 1, 1875, Anna Frances Baker, and had one son, Francis Henry Lincoln, Jr., born December 2, 1876.

As secretary of his college class he was efficient, indefatigable, and devoted. He was always present at the class reunions, to the preparation for which he gave much thought and pains, preserving the thread of the class history, contributing now reminiscences in prose or verse, now sympathetic tributes to those who had died, and always the charm of his genial personality. Many newspaper and other notices of deceased classmates owed their o igin and their completeness to his interest and care.

At the class dinner in 1903 he was presented by the class with a silver service "in affectionate appreciation of his services as class secretary." At the class dinner in 1911 he was for the first time absent from his usual place, on account of what was supposed to be a slight illness. But a severe surgical operation, followed by a week of unprecedentedly hot weather, brought to an untimely end an honorable, useful, and happy life.

The following extracts are from a tribute written for the Christian Register by his friend and co-worker Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, and from the Memorial Address given at his funeral by Rev. Louis C. Cornish.

Mr. Eliot says:—

"Mr. Lincoln and I entered the service of the American Unitarian Association together in 1898, he as treasurer and I as secretary. For thirteen years we have been in almost daily intercourse. He gave his time, his business experience, his knowledge of men and affairs, unstintedly to the cause in which he believed. I think my memory is correct in affirming that, except at the time of his brother's death, he had never missed a meeting of the board of directors. His comrades in the board of directors and in the Unitarian fellowship at large learned to rely on his sure-footed wisdom. No one felt safe in going against his advice, and no one ever accepted his counsel without being glad that he had done so. His business judgments were apt to be conservative, and he sometimes seemed too cautious to the more adventurous spirits among us; but he urged his opinions with such good sense and with such kindly wit that opposition was disarmed. In public speech he was firm and decided in support of what he thought right, but he was always good-tempered, patient with antagonisms, and absolutely fair to opponents. In contentious meetings or in the occasional frictions of executive work, his moderation and ready tact soothed irritation and showed men of incompatible opinions or temperaments how they might contentedly unite in good works. In the discharge of his administrative duties he was fidelity itself. In a period when the work of the treasurer's office increased rapidly in volume and intricacy he was resourceful and ingenious in devising improvements in the methods of keeping and presenting the accounts. He kept the credit of the Association at the highest point; he met every obligation promptly; he invested our funds judiciously. It is the testimony of the successive auditing committees and the expert accountants they have employed that for completeness, clearness, and accuracy the books and ledgers of the Association are the models of their kind.

"The habit of Mr. Lincoln's personal life was unostentatious and democratic. He cared little for luxuries, and could not be either indolent or self-indulgent. Simplicity, sincerity, and uprightness marked his daily walk. He believed in steady industry as the secret of accomplishment, so he travelled very little and seldom or never took a vacation. He visibly enjoyed all cheerful human intercourse, and, like all the Lincolns, had an inexhaustible fund of apt and droll anecdotes which he used discreetly to enliven debate, puncture conceit, illustrate a situation, or emphasize a point. Good sense, good temper, good humor, were in his make-up. Love of truth, gentleness, and honor were his inheritance. Such qualities would alone have won for him the respect and admiration of his associates; but to them he added the grace of genial courtesy and the capacity for modest, efficient, and disinterested public service. He illustrated the virtues of friend, husband, father, counsellor, citizen, and administrator of public trusts, and through all the years of intimate association I can recall no word or thought or act of his that is not pleasant to think of."

From Mr. Cornish's address:—

"When we were with him, we were prone to forget his business concerns and his personal tastes. He always appeared to put them aside and to give himself wholly to the occupation of the hour. Whatever the topic of the moment, he touched it with his own peculiar charm. Fair play and kindly judgment, rectitude, a sound and wholesome sanity,—how often have these qualities shone forth in his speech, his decisions, his deeds! How often, too, has the topic of the moment been lighted by his keen and subtle wit! The apt quotation, the anecdote that served the need, the reminiscence that illumined the whole consideration and gave it a kindly turn and made the decision easier,—how our memory testifies to these qualities in rare degree in our intercourse with him! . . .

"The modesty and simplicity and directness which marked all his dealings with life were noticeable, too, in the expression of his religion. Always slow to voice a wish or preference, ever ready to let others speak, he was always ready to take such action as seemed to him wise and for the good of the church. In his references to prayer and aspiration he was direct where others, more given to the habit of speech, often were silent. Gratefully do we of this parish remember that for many years he was our parish clerk, and that he was also one of the deacons of the church, serving each month in the administration of the Communion. He was the friend and counsellor of the ministers of the parish for many years, and also of the ministers of other churches in the town. Withal he was a man of strong and simple Christian faith, who took thought of high and holy things. It is fitting that in this meeting-house which he loved so well these words of grateful appreciation should be spoken."

Born Jan. 6, 1844, Boston
Parents William Montgomery and Helen Louisa Woods
In college 1863–67; Degrees A.B. 1867
Died April 15, 1911, New York

He taught school in Barre, Mass., during the first year after graduation and then for another year studied law in Boston in the office of the Hon. Josiah G. Abbott.

At the end of that time he removed to New York and studied law in the office of Prichard, Choate & Smith, 49 Wall Street, New York, for a year, and there in the year 1870 he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of law. In March, 1872, he became a member of the firm of Hathaway & Montgomery and continued the practice of law as a member of that firm for more than twenty years, after which, following the dissolution of the firm, he continued in practice by himself until he retired from practice about the year 1906. Thereafter he lived a very secluded life in New York with his two sisters, rarely going anywhere.

During his active life he was a member of the Harvard Club, of the University Club, Bar Association, State Charities Aid Association, all of New York, and one of the Management of the Peabody Home for Aged Women.

I quote from a letter from our classmate Cleveland just received:—

"Throughout the early days of the Harvard Club from '68 onward he was very active as a member, being on many committees and doing active and loyal work for its prosperity. I often wish he could see it now, in its wonderfully beautiful home, which is a fruition of the early work with which he had much to do.

"In years gone by he was a frequent visitor at my home, and my children were devotedly fond of him and called him 'Uncle Billy.' He was always one of my dearest friends, a man I could trust and depend on. He had one of the kindest, sweetest natures that I ever met with. He was one of the most loyal of friends. After he retired he never came near us and in order to see him I had to go to him, which I made a point of doing from time to time, in order to keep in touch with him. During the last year of his life I went to see him constantly, because he was an ill man. Even during his severest illness he always wore his sweet, lovely smile. The last few weeks of his life his suffering was intense from the presence of cancer of the throat."

In college	1863–67; Medical School, 1867–72
Degrees	A.B. 1867; M.D. 1872
Married	Elizabeth Campbell Lee, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., May 20, 1880
Address	University Club, New York

He writes May 8, 1917:—

"Given up office at 19 East 28th Street occupied by me for twenty-seven years. Ceased professional work for a while on account of ill health. Expect to resume research work on cancer October 1 next. Been to Cuba this winter and to Florida. There are so many items of interest that space fails me to enumerate them—all is interesting. The world never grows dull, and my personal interest in it ever grows broader. The panorama grows more beautiful as it fades from view, as it must to those of us who are facing our fiftieth anniversary. Life is a 'beautiful adventure.' Long and happy life to my brother-classmates."

In 1918 he is still retired from practice, but is continuing research laboratory work.

In the New York Medical Record of March 6, 1915, he has an article on "Radiochemicotherapy; the Internal Therapeutics of the Radioelements."

Died	Feb. 19, 1918, Boston

NOTE.—The Secretary is indebted to Prof. Byron S. Hurlbut for a copy of a memorial of Saunders prepared by a committee of the Harvard Musical Association, of which Professor Hurlbut was chairman, which he has used as the basis of this memoir and from which liberal quotations have been made.

Charles Gurley Saunders came of New England ancestry, distinguished for public service. His paternal grandfather, Daniel Saunders, was one of the founders of the city of Lawrence; his father, also a Daniel Saunders, the second mayor of Lawrence, by his efficient service at the time of the disaster of the Pemberton Mills, won an enduring place in the history of the city. On his mother's side he was descended from the Reverend Arthur Brown, the first clergyman of the Episcopal Church in New Hampshire, from the Honorable Samuel Livermore, United States Senator from New Hampshire from 1793 until 1801, and from the Honorable Edward St. Leo Livermore, United States District Attorney, Chief Justice of the Superior Court of New Hampshire, and later, after his removal to Massachusetts, a representative in Congress. Thus, by inheritance, came his keen sense of civic duty, in the performance of which he never failed.

He was fitted for college at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and entered Harvard College in 1863 and was graduated in the year 1867. He did well in his college course, and had parts in several exhibitions: "An English Version" in the Junior exhibition, October 7, 1865; "A dissertation, 'Count Montalambert'" in the Senior exhibition, October 23, 1866; and a part at the Commencement Exercises, July 17, 1867, "A disquisition, 'Bayle as a Man of Letters.'" In the Senior year he was elected a member of the Phi Beta Kappa. He passed the first year after graduation in the study of law at Lawrence, but in the fall of 1868 entered Harvard Law School, from which he was graduated in 1870. In the same year he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of law in Boston in the office of the firm of D. & C. Saunders, composed of his father and uncle, Daniel, Jr., and Caleb Saunders, becoming a member of the firm which took the name of D. & C. & C. G. Saunders. During the remainder of his life he was actively engaged in the practice of law in Boston, devoting, however, a large part of his time, among other activities, to the affairs of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of which he was a member. He obtained recreation from his labors by extensive travels in America and Europe.

The Secretary quotes an interesting account of his travels in the southeastern part of Europe from a letter received from him in April, 1917:—

"In the spring of 1914 I visited the Balkans, Greece, and Turkey, returning through Roumania. I went as far East as Brusa in Anatolia.

"As a member of a joint committee of the General Convention [of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States] to confer with officials of the Eastern Orthodox Churches and the Old Catholics, I had an interview at Athens with the Archbishop, who is Metropolitan of Greece, and at Constantinople with the Ecumenical Patriarch. The latter interview was especially interesting. I was accompanied by a Secretary from the Embassy and by the Rector of the English Church. The Patriarch's palace is on the Stamboul side of the Golden Horn. We were rowed across from Pera in a caïque and landed at the water gate. His 'All Holiness' was cordial in his manner and expressed his gratitude for the kindness shown by the Episcopal Church in this country to members of the Eastern Churches. During the interview a sweet was served and then Turkish coffee. At the end he dismissed us with his blessing.

"I had the good fortune, when in Constantinople, to meet several English and American residents, including the Rev. Mr. Trew, a Presbyterian minister, and Sir Edwin Pears who had lived there forty years. . . . With the former I spent an afternoon examining the walls of Stamboul, and with the latter I took two long walks, one about Stamboul and the other about Pera and Galata. I thus had the chance to see many things which I should not have found from my guide-book.

"During my stay I went to the Selamlik with our Ambassador, Mr. Morgenthau. Our position was quite close to the door of the mosque, which the Sultan was to enter, and so I had an excellent opportunity to see him at close range. While we were waiting for his arrival, Thalatt Bey came up for a few minutes' conversation with Mr. Morgenthau, who, even then, regarded him as a leader in the Turkish administration."

While actively engaged in the practice of law, he also gave unstintedly of his time and strength to society, music, philanthropy, the church, and his friends. In the councils of the Protestant Episcopal Church he was especially active, but he was not narrow in his religious sympathies. In canon law he was probably the most learned man in this country; as a member of the Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral and chancellor of the diocese he was a wise and helpful counsellor.

The Secretary quotes further from the above-mentioned letter received from him in April, 1917:—

"I have long been the senior member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Massachusetts, to which I was elected in 1896, and I was a Deputy to the triennial General Convention of the Episcopal Church held at St. Louis last October [1916], it being my eighth term of service. I was appointed by the General Convention of 1913 a member of the Joint Commission for the Revision and Enrichment of the Prayer Book, which Commission is still at work. I am one of the judges of the 'Court of Review of the Trial of a Presbyter or Deacon' for the Province of New England; president of the Massachusetts Church Union; treasurer of the American Branch of the Anglican and Eastern Association; a member of the Executive Committee of the American Church Union, the American Ecclesiological Society, the New England Conservatory of Music, and of the State Executive Committee of Massachusetts and Rhode Island of the Y. M. C. A.; trustee of the White Fund, Lawrence, and of the Lawrence Public Library. I am a director of the Harvard Alumni Association and a member of the committee for the Harvard Endowment Fund. I am yet president of the Harvard Musical Association, of the Episcopal Church Association and of the Harvard Club of Lawrence.

"In business I am a director of the Dartmouth Manufacturing Corporation, of the Houston Oil Company of Texas, a trustee of the South Western Settlement and Development Co., not incorporated, and a trustee of the Lawrence Savings Bank."

In addition to the positions above mentioned, he was also senior warden of Grace Church, Lawrence, member of the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church, secretary of the Trustees of Donations to the Protestant Episcopal Church, president of the Episcopal Church Association, secretary of the Massachusetts Diocesan Choir Guild, president of the Episcopalian Club, vice-president of the Massachusetts Branch of the Free Church Association, chairman of the Committee on Hospitality at the Diocesan Convention, member of the Committee on Representation of Parishes and Missions, and deputy to the Synod of the First Province.

These activities, however, were in but one of his fields. He labored also in many others. Among the associations in which he was interested was the Appalachian Mountain Club of Boston. He was one of those who organized it in January, 1876, and a charter member of it when in April, 1878, it was reorganized and chartered as a corporation by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The Club was organized to bring together for cooperation all those interested in the mountains of New England and adjacent regions. Its activities in respect of the mountain regions of this part of the country are well known. Daniel Saunders, father of our classmate, who died a few years since at the age of ninety-five, had large interests in timber lands in the White Mountain region, and he and his son were familiar visitors to it.

Few even of Saunders' closest friends knew all of his undertakings. For twenty-five years he was president of the Chadwick Club of Lawrence, instituted to increase interest in music and the understanding thereof; for nineteen years he served his parish church, without pay, as choir-master; for thirty-six years he was a devoted member of the Harvard Musical Association, watching intently and assisting its growth in membership and prosperity, fostering friendship and the love and appreciation of music. He labored hard and indefatigably, serving long and on many committees. "I worked with him as a brother officer," writes one of our fellow-members, "for nearly twenty years and I can testify that he never lost an opportunity to serve the Association."

He was president of the Lawrence Harvard Club; he was largely instrumental in establishing and developing the Federation of the New England Harvard Clubs, and he served as its president; in 1896 he was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention; he was a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music; to these and other kindred causes he gave himself ungrudgingly. The distinguishing characteristic of his work as of his life, was quiet efficiency; he was always to be depended upon.

For friendship, especially with men, he possessed a rare genius; and, as time brought no limit to his power of making friends, a body of men of all ages has, through him, been united in a manner seldom seen. He was modest, punctilious in the performance of every duty, sympathetic, genuinely interested in the welfare of his friends; all knew that they could rely upon his counsel and his aid, and the passing of years only made each one's certainty of this the stronger. He will be held in tender, real affection.

Saunders died suddenly at his rooms in Boston on February 19, 1918. Funeral services for him which were largely attended were at Grace Church in Lawrence, Friday, February 22.

Degrees	A.B. 1867; A.M. 1872
Died	July 16, 1908, Boston

After graduation, he began the study of law, first in Boston and then at the Harvard Law School. Before completing his course he went to Europe in March, 1870, and continued to study law in Berlin. Later he spent time in travelling in France and Italy. He returned home in the fall of the year 1873, and continued the study of law in Boston. On April 12, 1875, he was admitted to the bar, but never engaged in practice. For several years he spent his summers in Europe, having his residence in Boston. In 1887 he moved to Milton, Mass., living there in summer and in Boston in winter. He took active interest in politics and was a member of the Democratic Town Committee for several years. In 1896 he was made Honorary and Vice President of the Palmer & Buckner Club of Milton. He had been from time to time a delegate for Milton to many Democratic representative, senatorial, councillor and state conventions. Later he became a resident of Boston, being a member of several clubs, and passing much of his time at the Boston Athletic Association. "The latter years of his life he spent quietly at his lodging with daily visits to his Club, where he took his meals. He read much, and had a great fund of information and anecdote. He was much liked by his friends on account of his amiable disposition and his interesting conversation." He was never married, and died in Boston, July 16, 1908.

Died	Oct. 3, 1911, Boston

He was the son and eldest child of his parents, who removed to Concord, N.H., when he was a young child. He attended the public schools in that place until he went to Phillips Exeter Academy to prepare for college. After graduation he attended the Harvard Law School in the year 1868, and later studied architecture with the firm of Hunt & Richardson of 19 Pemberton Square, Boston, during part of the year 1869, and while there drew the plans for a house built by Governor Smyth of Manchester, N.H. Preferring an out-of-door life, however, he took up civil engineering, and from September, 1869, to June, 1870, he was transitman and assistant engineer of the Sugar River Railroad in New Hampshire.

In June, 1870, he accepted the position of chief engineer of the Duxbury & Cohasset Railroad in Massachusetts, and was occupied as engineer and superintendent of construction of this road during its location and until it was fully completed, about January 1, 1872. Afterwards he was engaged upon several railroads, part of the time in locating and preparing plans for a bridge, one thousand feet long, across Taunton Great River, at Fall River, and in locating a part of the Nashua, Acton & Boston Railroad. In 1873 he made a trip to England, Ireland, and Scotland, and the Continent, and visited the Vienna Exposition. In March, 1874, he was a civil engineer on the Old Colony Railroad and private secretary to his father, the Hon. Onslow Stearns, its president. He continued his practice as civil engineer until March 1, 1886, when he became a member of the firm of John A. Lowell & Co., Engravers, in Boston, and during the time intervening he visited England, Scotland, and France in the spring of 1883, and passed the winter 1883–84 with his family in London. He visited England again in the autumn of 1885.

His wife died and his daughter Frieda married, but he continued to reside in Boston. On February 1, 1899, he left the firm of John A. Lowell & Co. and later became interested in the manufacture of woollens, with a mill at Schaghticoke, N.Y.

In 1898 he took the Mediterranean trip to Gibraltar, Algiers, Malta, Egypt, Palestine, Asia Minor, Constantinople, Greece, and Italy; in 1899 he went to Cuba; in 1900, to old Mexico, California, Oregon, Washington; and in 1901, to Porto Rico.

In his later years he was a member of the Eastern Yacht Club and spent part of his summers at the Club House at Marblehead Neck.

He died in Boston, on October 3, 1911, of cerebral hemorrhage.

*FRANK PRESTON STEARNS

Born	Jan. 4, 1846, Medford, Mass.
Parents	George Luther Stearns and Mary Elizabeth Preston
In college	1863–67; Degrees A.B. 1867
Married	Emilia Maciel, of Fayal, Sept. 29, 1898
Children	George Lindsley, b. March 10, 1904
Died	Jan. 21, 1917, Arlington, Mass.

After graduating he remained at home a year, with no settled occupation. He went to Europe in 1868 for the benefit of his eyes, returning in 1869 with improved health. In 1870 he became clerk of the yard in the Boston Navy Yard. During the first years after graduation he devoted himself mainly to the study of history, literature and modern languages, and writing, contributing to the Boston Commonwealth, the Springfield Republican, Old and New, and to the Journal of Speculative Philosophy, as well as to various other newspapers. In the summer of 1873 he went to the Azores and returned the following October, living in Philadelphia in winter and at various places along the seacoast in summer. Later he lived in Boston, Medford, and other places in the vicinity of Boston.

He writes, in 1876:—

"One year I spent in Europe studying history and art from the monuments, but injured myself by over-application and too long walks in Switzerland. I climbed to the top of Strasburg Cathedral, then the highest building in the world, and discovered a new route from Montanvert across the Mer de Glace to the Chapeau, avoiding the Mauvais Pas. In Berlin I was present at the opening of the Prussian Parliament, and saw Count Moltke on the floor of the House. He wore silver epaulettes, and had broad red stripes on his pantaloons; otherwise he appeared like a quiet, amiable, and rather shy gentleman, certainly nothing grandiose or Napoleonic in his style. I mention this as I presume he is considered the most eminent soldier likely to be seen in our time."

In 1887 he was in correspondence with Dr. H. von Holst and other European writers in regard to American history and literature. During the campaign in the autumn of 1896 he published a number of letters on the Tariff and the Currency in Eastern and Western newspapers. He also published an article in Lippincott's Magazine on "Goethe in Practical Politics." In 1897 he was employed to write biographical sketches for the National Cyclopædia, and he had the pleasure of inserting accounts of several of his classmates besides one of Prof. F. J. Child and one of his schoolmaster, F. B. Sanborn. He was a member of the Boston Authors Club and of the American Academy of Political Science.

In 1898 he purchased an estate in Arlington Heights, Mass., and on September 29, 1898, he married Emilia Maciel of Fayal. In November, 1902, Herman Linde, the German art collector, took Rubens's masterpiece, "The Feast of Herod," to his house so that he could write a critique on it. On March 10, 1904, a son was born to him, George Lindsley Stearns, named for his father and his classmate Lindsley. During the last years of his life he was under treatment for his health.

His classmate Peckham contributes the following:—

"Stearns' home in college days was a refuge for several of his classmates. It was a wonderful home. Ralph Waldo Emerson, Dr. Samuel G. Howe the philanthropist, Bronson Alcott, Richard Hallowell, Julia Ward Howe the poetess and Wendell Phillips the orator, were among the visitors. Stearns' father had equipped John Brown of Ossawatomie for his attempt to free the slaves. Later he was commissioned by the Government to raise regiments of negro soldiers for the Civil War. Frank had some commission as assistant to his father. His mother was of fine Harvard and Revolutionary stock. A blood red peony marked the boundary fence of her grandfather's place at Bunker Hill after the fence was burned down in the battle. Slips of that plant are flourishing still in New Jersey.

"On the walls of the Stearns' home hung fine engravings of the works of Domenichino and Michelangelo and Thorwaldsen. In the hall was a bust of John Brown which was made for Stearns' mother when Brown was in prison just before his execution. In this home a tired young guest could lie down and rest among the pictures and flowers or under the grape-vines and listen to the sound of falling water. In those days Harvard was not so national in spirit, but the Stearnses were among the first to offer a general welcome to all. Although the family was Emersonian in its cast of religious thought, yet Frank's friendships took in all earnest people, as witness his care for our classmate Davis in his latter days.

"If any credit is due for founding the oldest of college papers, the 'Harvard Advocate,' Stearns deserves much of that credit. Just as his father had stood up against the slave power, so Frank used the same machinery to combat the mediaeval faculty of that day. He had a notion of reforming all abuses. He said that he took our classmate Hoar in a tilbury to Concord and destroyed a Democratic campaign flag, having a prejudice against all Democrats. Our class was still full of the war spirit and the war ended too soon to work it off. Some other outlet had to be found.

"Stearns was much of a traveler; several times he visited Europe, traveling the popular ways, and also he went to the Azores and visited the Rocky Mountains. He was a great fisherman in Maine and Canada. He wrote many books on art, travel, biography and literature. Those who differed from him as a reformer had reason to regret it bitterly, although his sincerity was unquestionable. All the more those classmates whom he befriended must remember him gratefully, and miss him, as the number dwindles with time, while we say with Viola:—

'And what should I do in Illyria?
My brother, he is in Elysium.'"

A list of his publications follows:—

In 1889, a book on John Brown.

In 1894, "The Life and Genius of Tintoretto."

In 1895, "The Midsummer of Italian Art" and "Sketches from Concord and Appledore."

In 1896, "The Real and Ideal in Literature."

In 1897, "Modern English Prose Writers."

In 1899, "Life of Prince Otto von Bismarck" and a revised edition of "The Midsummer of Italian Art." (A third edition was published in 1911.)

In 1901, a book on art, entitled "Four Great Venetians."

In 1903, "Napoleon and Machiavelli."

In 1904, "True Republicanism."

In 1905, "Cambridge Sketches."

In 1906, "Life and Genius of Nathaniel Hawthorne."

In 1907, a biography of his father.

In 1915, "Politics and Metaphysics."

*Edward Leander, b. Oct. 4, 1882; d. Sept. 20, 1902
Died March 20, 1916, Brookline, Mass.

His boyhood home was in Fitchburg, Mass. Finding progress in the local high school too slow for him, he secured a tutor and entered Harvard College in 1863. After graduation from Harvard College in 1867 he entered the employ of the Rollstone National Bank of Fitchburg, Mass., and remained there until February, 1871, when he removed to Lewiston, Me. In 1868 he had a severe illness, after which he travelled in Europe for seven months to regain his health.

In February, 1871, he became assistant treasurer of the Lewiston Bleachery and Dye Works and continued to reside in Lewiston until March, 1885. On May 23, 1873, he became treasurer of the Lewiston Gas Light Company and during his residence there he was also treasurer and director of the Lewiston & Auburn Railroad, treasurer of the Union Water Power Company, and agent of the Franklin Company. On or about the first of March, 1885, he removed to New York, having become on that date treasurer of the Renfrew Manufacturing Company and treasurer of the American Zylonite Company. He remained in New York until August, 1888, when he resigned these two offices and removed to Boston.

On September 9, 1888, he was elected treasurer of the Franklin Company of Lewiston, Maine, and treasurer of the Lincoln Mills, and for the last years of his life was connected with corporations forming part of the business interests of Lewiston, being during that period president and treasurer of the Knitted Fabrics Company, treasurer of the Franklin Company, and treasurer of the Union Water Power Company. He was a director of all of these companies and treasurer of the Lewiston Bleachery and Dye Works and of the Continental Mills, all of these corporations having business offices in Boston.

During these years he was a resident of Brookline, Mass., and died at his home in that town on March 20, 1916.
